Notes for James Junkin:

James Junkin, the eldest son of William and Jane Galloway Junkin, was the great grandfather of the author (Laura Gayle Junkin). Nine children. He was born 9 Oct., 1772, and died 17 February 1823 in Wayne Twp., Mifflin County, Pa., at 50 years of age. When he was ten years old, his father built the first of his three mills in Mifflin County. Soon the Junkin mills were well-known in the vicinity. Customers were numerous, and it was the usual thing to see several men, who had traveled either by horseback or wagon, waiting in the mill yard for their grain to be ground. James and his brothers William and Andrew assisted their father with work about the mills. As William the elder prospered and added to his land holdings and milling business, James became his father's right hand man, the other boys having taken up businesses of their own. Eventually his father turned the active management of the mills over to James, who had married Agnes Nancy Bratton 12 May, 1794. After the death of William's wife, Jane Galloway, in 1786, the young couple made their home at the mills, and it was here that their nine children were born.

It was about 1820 that financial disaster came to James. He had given security to a banker whom he considered trustworthy, but through ill fortune and mismanagement of his affairs, this man failed in business, and James was obligated to pay large sums in his behalf. Worried over the financial hardships that this might impose on his family is said to have caused his death in 1823. Considering the longevity of most of the Junkins, 50 was a comparatively early age. He was buried near Waynesburg (now McVey town) in Mifflin Co.

Notes for David Xavier Junkin:

A family legend states that since he was the tenth son, his parents choice the "X" denoting "ten", and then selected a name to fit. The name "Xavier" was to produce smiles and innuendos as Dr. Junkin became well-known in Presbyterian circles. From all reports, no one enjoyed the joke more than Dr. Junkin himself. A second family legend states that he was given no middle name or initial at birth, but when he went to college he ran up against a bureacracy that insisted he had to have a middle initial. He noted that he was the tenth son, so chose X. The story further states that the Xavier was added by a later generation.
